Unions Set the Agenda in Sacramento

In 2006, working people in California achieved a remarkable series of victories. Unions set the agenda for the year with an overwhelming defeat of Governor Schwarzenegger's anti-union ballot measures in the Special Election. The Governor would not have agreed to new gains for working people if unions hadn't exposed his record on those issues to California voters.

In one of the most significant legislative gains in years, labor won a minimum wage increase of $1.25 over two years. AB 1835 (Lieber) raises California's minimum wage to $8 by 2008, making it one of the highest minimum wages in the country.

Hot on the heels of the wage raise, we won a major victory in the creation of a discount program that will benefit millions of Californians who are unable to afford prescription drugs. AB 2911 (Nuñez) allows the state to use the purchasing power of Medi-Cal to help obtain discounts for low-income Californians. It's estimated that the legislation will result in average discounts of 40 to 60 percent.

In another critical win for union members in 2006, we preserved the right to see our own doctors if we get injured on the job. AB 2068 (Nava) extended until December 21, 2009 the right of union members to predesignate our doctors.

In a remarkable testament to labor's ability in the Capitol, the Federation and our unions also defeated AB 2399 (Garcia), a tribal-state gaming compact that lacked protections for workers who seek a voice at work and a good union contract.

In a bow to his corporate donors, Schwarzenegger vetoed legislation that would have restored permanent disability benefits for injured workers that he slashed two years earlier. And he again vetoed bills to disclose the list of corporations, like Wal-Mart, that rely on taxpayer-funded healthcare programs for their employees, to assess the economic impact of retail superstores on our communities, and to help curb corporate tax evasion in the manner of Enron and WorldCom.

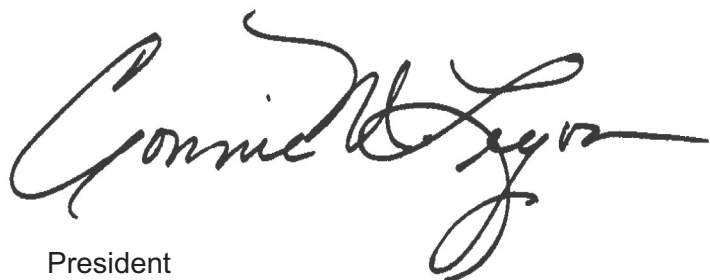

The Governor also refused to sign legislation to prevent abuse of the state's out-of-control initiative process.

Overall, however, the year brought several major advances for working people in California. The year was a testament to the continued activism of organized labor to improve the lives of workers across the state.

In Unity,

Executive Secretary-Treasurer

President
